JOB SUMMARY

This position is located within the Office of Naval Intelligence, Farragut Technical Analysis Center. The incumbent will fill an All-Source, Scientific and Technical Intelligence (S&TI) analyst position within one of six departments within the command. Farragut provides the highest quality strategic and S&TI analysis of foreign naval capabilities. Essential information and services are provided to a broad range of consumers including Navy acquisition managers, weapons and systems developers, operational forces, and national security policy-makers. The incumbent will apply analytic expertise, initiative, creativity, critical thinking, and strong communication and interpersonal skills on a daily basis to solve complex intelligence problems and drive intelligence collection efforts.

Specific Duties

- Produce technical intelligence assessments on a wide variety of areas including, but not limited to: technologies, sensors, weapons, platforms, combat systems, C4ISR, and cyber capabilities.
- Develop/validate standing collection requirements, collection support briefs, and support command-validated requirements in alignment with Research and Analysis Plan priorities
- Respond to ad hoc requirements and provide formal feedback through official reporting channels
- Build, operate, and maintain a variety of technical intelligence data analysis tools and technical databases
- Sustain and create outreach and relationship-building efforts with both Navy and Intelligence Community (IC) counterparts
- Monitor collection results for accuracy/completeness in response to standing
- Conduct technical research, analysis and production on adversary naval systems and capabilities.
- Utilize existing modeling and simulation tools to produce technical characterizations and assessments.
- Monitor collection results for accuracy/completeness in response to standing
- Perform internal and external collaboration with an enterprise-wide focus.
