1. (U) MEXICO: On 31 December 2020, in a refuge for the endangered vaquita porpoise in the upper Gulf of California, one boat was destroyed during an attack on vessels operated by a conservation NGO group. The crew aboard one of the vessels was retrieving a gill net from the water when fishermen aboard at least five pangas began throwing lead weights and Molotov cocktails at both crew and military officials who were onboard. According to the NGO group, as the vessel began to leave the scene, one of the pangas swerved in front of it and smashed into the hull. The smaller vessel broke in two and its two passengers were thrown into the sea. A second NGO vessel recovered the two men, who were then given emergency first aid. Doctors with the Mexican Navy arrived and treated the two, one of whom wasn't breathing when he was brought aboard. While the men were being treated, the NGO group reported, two other fishermen boarded the NGO vessel, threatened the crew and officials onboard, and smashed a camera that was filming the incident.
